

I'm an American company.

How can I use Higlobe to pay my employees in Brazil or Mexico?

Higlobe

Higlobe for your employees

There is no need for employers to open a Higlobe account to pay their international employees.

The best way for US companies to use Higlobe is to refer their international employees to Higlobe and encourage them to open their own Higlobe accounts.

Higlobe works by giving international employees a Higlobe account.

We have partnered with a US bank to enable non-US residents to open a US receiving bank account to receive their salary from US companies, in a domestic transfer.

Higlobe for your employees

When your employees open a Higlobe account, they will receive a US routing number and an individual account number, which you can use to pay their salary.

The employee's Higlobe account accepts ACH payments, so you can pay your international employees in the same way that you would make any other ACH payment. There is no need to make special arrangements for international payments or wire transfers.

When your employee opens their Higlobe account, they will receive an account number and routing number.

With this information, you can deposit their payment using the preferred bank or payment app of your company.

The time it takes for your employee to receive the money will depend on the transfer configuration of your bank or app. Typically, ACH transfers can take anywhere from a few hours to up to three business days.

Please ensure that you collect the correct account number and routing number from your employee to ensure a successful and timely payment.

The Higlobe account is an American account, transferring to it is like making a domestic transfer within the country itself, facilitating and cheapening the process of paying your employees.
